

Jenny Hewson

Over the last 20 years, Jenny has collaborated professionally on sustainable land science projects, processes, and policies in over 25 countries throughout the tropics. This has been both rewarding and humbling. However, Jenny has resided in Salt Lake City since 2005 and had never had the opportunity to engage and collaborate locally, right here. Seeking an opportunity to listen, learn, expand act locally, Jenny applied to the Salt Lake City Boards and Commissions and was assigned to the Parks, Natural Lands, Urban Forestry & Trails (PNUT) Advisory Board in 2019 as an At-Large member. Jenny is grateful to have this opportunity to engage locally and learn about the plethora of responsibilities, activities, and issues that the Public Lands Department impacts at the individual park level, and much more broadly through its portfolio of parks and public spaces, trails and natural lands, urban forestry, and golf courses. Jenny is excited to support the Public Lands Department as it implements Reimagine Nature; SLC Public Lands Master Plan. In her free time, Jenny can be found outside trail running or pottering in the beautiful Wasatch mountains, plotting a hiking trip, curiously exploring the world around her, or germinating the odd vegetable seed!
